The Challenge

The church's copper-faced roof was both a defining design feature and a functional waterproofing system. Over time, it had begun to delaminate and fail, leaving the building exposed to leaks. The geometry of the roof — with steep slopes, vertical upstands, and complex details — made the refurbishment particularly demanding. Any replacement had to respect the building's heritage character while achieving compliance with fire and insulation regulations.

Our Solution

We installed Langley's TA-20(CF) Copper Faced Flat Roofing System, the only Broof(t4)-accredited insulated copper roof in Europe, combining long-term durability with a natural copper finish.

The works involved removing failing aprons, repairing the substrate, applying Paradiene membranes with a 3 mm copper foil cap sheet, and carefully shaping drips and complex details for a seamless result. Thanks to the system's flexibility, we completed the project efficiently despite the roof's challenging design.
